Agreed. I think there's nothing to proceed on and a whole lot to take away as LVD grows and refines its business for the long term: tribal investment, adoption, perhaps more on-res activity (which I think he got wrong), tribal owned bank/ACH, etc.

Let's get the take aways together and bake them in to see this thing to long term. I thought this was an excellent result.

Matt,

I haven't had an opportunity read it all the way through but initial thoughts from David Bernick at Dechert are as follows:

"Very thorough and remarkably neutral. Substantively, it is hard to argue with most of it, because most of it well captures the issues. I think we should call it a win without embracing it and without gloating, because it is a win but it has several points with which we disagree. Also seems to me that Sullivan will have a hard time getting rid of the case soon. Lots of quotable material."

We are preparing a memo summarizing the opinion as I write this and rest assured that NAFSA is on top of this as well.

Sincerely,

This is the first time we haven't seen the BS one sided arguments against tribal lending. Bottom of page 13 even says (in fact the tribes might even be right!)... NY will be on an immediate press release to spin this. I hope that NAFSA is doing so right now as well.

Karrie something that really struck me was they mention the citizenship of the participants a lot. At council we talked about adoption. It seems like an excellent next step, not to mention an honor to me personally as well.
